Targeted Subtle Energy Rejuvenates Irradiated Cell Cultures

Research Conducted by Joie P. Jones, University of CA, Irvine 2003

Research conducted at University of California, Irvine, demonstrated that specific and targeted subtle energy patterns were able to significantly increase the survival rate of cells subjected to gamma radiation. This study provides evidence that specific subtle energy patterns can directly contribute to the rejuvenation of the body's tissues.

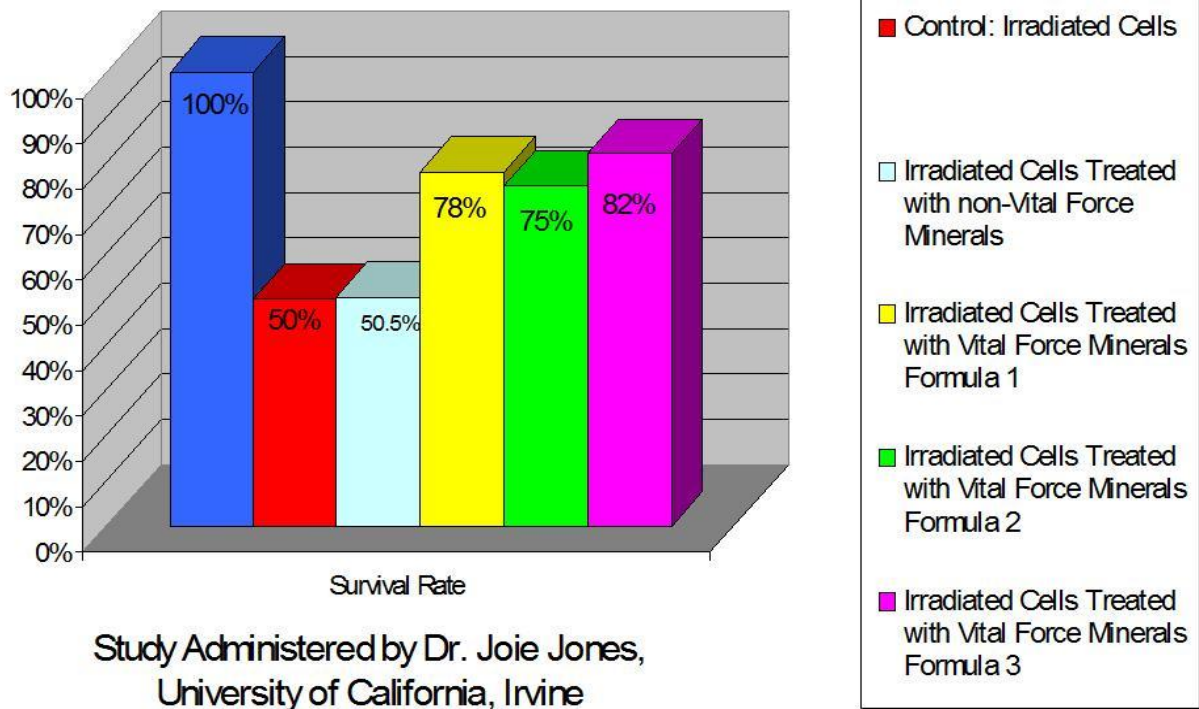

What is Gamma Radiation?

- High frequency electromagnetic energy rays
- They are emitted from radioactive substances and from the cosmos
- Gamma Rays are the most damaging form of radiation for human cells

Vital Force™ Formulas Rejuvenate Cells Damaged By Gamma Radiation

How was the Experiment Conducted?

- Under strict protocols at the University of California, Irvine's Radiology Dept. laboratory
- Cell cultures were irradiated at dosages that result in 50% mortality in normal human cells.
- The scientists studied six cell cultures. They added targeted subtle energy formulas in a trace mineral base to three cell cultures. They added the trace mineral base with no subtle energy into a fourth culture. The remaining two cultures served as control groups, one was irradiated, and the other was not exposed to radiation.

Significance of the Experiment

- Targeted subtle energy patterns generated by Vital Force Technology supply information and energy to cells that stimulates cell repair and helps to rejuvenate damaged cells even under extreme conditions.
